NOTES

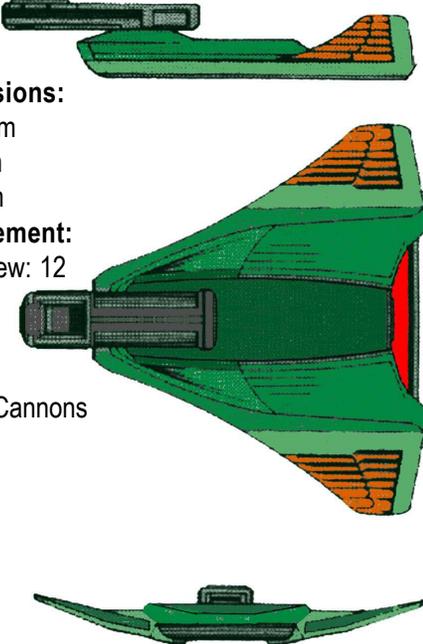

For nearly two centuries, there was no contact between the forces of the United Federation of Planets and those of the Romulan Star Empire. As a result, information about Romulan vessels is sparse at best. However, it is clear that Romulan vessel classifications are extremely complex, and seem to be based upon whichever shipyard constructed the vessel. The common "V" nomenclature refers to the starstation Vascalanam which serves as the Romulan Imperial Navy's headquarters as well as its primary construction yard. I.R.C. is "Imperial Romulan Cruiser" and I.R.W. is "Imperial Romulan Warbird." The rare R.F.T. is "Romulan Free Trader," a ship ostensibly independent of the Romulan military or government. Some smaller vessels appear to serve in this loose association of merchants, while others are clearly military in nature.

It has been suggested that Romulan spies managed to retrieve information on Federation starships. This theory was augmented by the discovery that Romulans are an off-shoot of the Vulcan race, and that they had indeed infiltrated into Federation society. However, while similar in design to starships of the United Federation of Planets, Romulan vessels could not match their Federation counterparts in speed and weaponry. Until 2269, their engines were simple impulse, capable of faster-than-light but at nowhere near the velocities the Federation warp drive could produce. Their weapon of choice, the plasma bolt, though capable of pursuing a target at high speed, had a limited range. Their primary success in technology has been the development of their cloaking technology which allows their starships to become invisible. While means have been developed to track cloaked vessels, those means are no way totally successful. The Klingon D-7 battlecruiser as well as the D-7C k't'inga battlecruiser are also used by the Romulan Star Empire as the result of an alliance between the two empires in 2268. The Klingons received cloaking technology from the Romulans, and the Romulans received advanced starship engineering from the Klingons. In 2278, it was determined that Romulans had developed singularity-drives and singularity-powered starships. Thus equipped, newer Romulan vessels are more than a match in terms of speed to their Federation counterparts. Like their Klingon counterparts, Romulan vessels are continually testing Federation defenses, testing their newest cloaking devices while probing for an opportunity to strike a devastating blow. Virtually all Romulan vessels are capable of landing on the surface of any given planet. This is because they did not develop transporter technology on their own, and are believed to have stolen that technology from the Federation some time after 2266.

The Romulans, also a war-like race, are more organized and logical than the Klingons. They pride themselves on their intellect, but avoid considering themselves clever, despite the fact their forces seem to concentrate on subterfuge, secrecy and setting traps for unsuspecting starships. Romulan starships are manned by experienced crews consisting of both men and women, in virtually equal numbers. All Romulan children (males and females) are expected to serve a tour of duty in their military. As a result, it can be expected to find a female commander aboard one of their starships. Romulan society is devoted to service to the Empire and the Praetor. Romulans consider themselves superior to the other sentient races throughout their region of the galaxy, including Klingons and Humankind.

INTERIOR SCHEMATICS

CROSS SECTION OF VAS HATHAM CLASS

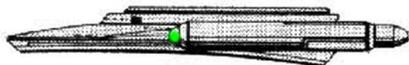

- Deck 1 Bridge, Cloaking Device, Captain's Stateroom
- Deck 2 Officer's Quarters, Medical Center, Science Labs
- Deck 3 Main Deck, Engineering, Plasma Weapon Center
- Deck 4 Storage, Self-Destruct, Food Preparation & Laundry

This class of vessel was the first detected by the Federation during the incursion of 2266. With its plasma torpedoes and cloaking device, a single ship of this type destroyed several Federation outposts and nearly destroyed a Constitution-class heavy cruiser in combat. Starship captains must not make the mistake of assuming an easy victory against a lesser opponent. Romulans are excellent tacticians.
